THE BUTTERFIELDS OF MIDDLESEX.

By GEO. A. GORDON, A.M., Member of the New England Historic Genealogical Society.

THE common spelling of the name in New England is Butterfield, and the same prevails usually throughout the United States; though instances are found of Botfield, of direct German extraction; and, occasionally, of Boterville, the French form. In England, the family date their arrival from Normandy in the twelfth century. Robert de Boteville took two fells in Bedfordshire in 1165 and likewise in Norfolk (Liber Niger). John de Buteville was possessed of the lordship of Cheddington, in Bucks, in 1316 (Palsgrave, Parl. Writs). The name Botevyle occurs in the Battle Abbey roll. The estate of Bouteville was near Carentum, in Normandy, a town at the mouth of the river Tante, where are yet to be seen old fortifications, a castle and a curious Norman church (The Norman People). A branch of the family settled at Church Stretton, Shropshire. The English pronunciation indicates a corruption of the German word Botefeld (Bote, a messenger, and feld, field, or clearing where the trees have been felled). Similar instances occur in Butterley, Buttermere, Butterwick, Butterworth in England, and perhaps Buterville in Ireland; the affix in each case denoting locality—ley meadow, mere pond, wick bay, worth enclosure—where the messenger dwelt. Or, the derivation may be from bōfeld, which, among the Anglo-Saxons, was that portion of the manor, the timber of which was reserved for the repairs of the manor house, buildings, &c., and the mending of the fences. Such privileges were styled Haybote (from hait, hedge, or the land enclosed by it, and bote, repair). The official charged with such repairs was styled the Hayward, whence the modern word: as also Heyward and Howard. Our word botcher, for a blundering repairer, is a survival of this same bote in common speech.

BENJAMIN<sup>1</sup> BUTTERFIELD, from whom the American family chiefly derive issue, was at Charlestown, in the Bay Colony, in 1638. He probably married in England and brought a little family with him. His name appears among the first town orders of Woburn, and, in 1643, he was made a Freeman. In 1645, we find his name on the Woburn tax list. In 1652, the inhabitants of Woburn petitioned for leave to explore the west side of the Concord river. The report was, "a very comfortable place to accommodate a company of God's people." In 1653, Benjamin Butterfield headed a petition of twenty-nine, including the petitioners of the preceding year, for a tract of land six miles square, "to begin at the Merrimack river, at a neck of land next to Concord river," to run southerly on Concord river and westerly into the wild country. The spot was given to the natives as Namackock? The Indian word, Rev. John Eliot, about the same time gave a grant of "the Great Neck," lying between Pawtucket Falls on the Merrimack and the Mass. falls on the Concord, as a reserve for the Christianized Indians. This area was known as Wamesit. The six mile tract was occupied in 1654 by Butterfield and his associates, and in 1655 was incorporated as Chelmsford. The line between the Indians and the whites was run "on the east side of Butterfield's High way," and was marked by a ditch. On this highway Benjamin Butler pitched his tent, and built his house, somewhere within the limits of what is now ward No. 1, 1800th. In 1657, he became as one of the citizens of Chelmsford, to whom was given, Dudley gave of 1,500 acres in Ballerica was conveyed. In 1667 he was sold, and 23 Aug. 1667, he married, 20 Hannah, the widow of Thomas Whittemore of Cambridge. In 1668, Newfields, a tract of 241 acres of land, across Sandy brook and extending up the Merrimack, was granted to Chelmsford. Of this, perhaps the best land in the growing town, Benjamin Butterfield obtained 12 acres, the largest share of any one person. In 1688, the Indian reservation, Wamesit, was purchased by the whites. Three of Butterfield's sons, Nathaniel, Samuel and Joseph, were among the grantees (Mss. Decs., x, 19). This territory, which had been occupied by Wabanaki and his tribe as a cornfield and fishing station, is now occupied by the town of Lowell. The purchase included, also, 200 acres upon the north and east side of the Merrimack, of a "Wilderness" land, a general term for the unsettled country outside incorporated limits. Nathaniel and Samuel Butterfield settled on the Wamesit lands, and Joseph in the wilderness, between Tyng's pond and the river.
